

THE EVENING STAR.

WASHINGTON.

WEDNESDAY, February 21, 1894.

CROSBY & SONS, Editors.

THE EVENING STAR has a regular and permanent circulation nearly double the combined circulation of the other Washington dailies. As a News and Advertising Medium it has no competitor.

For order to avoid delays, on account of personal absence, letters to THE STAR should be addressed to any individual connected with the office, but simply to THE STAR, or to the Editor or Business Department, according to tenor or purpose.

The reopening yesterday of senatorial debate on the bill providing for the construction of a new Government Printing Office building developed unanimity of sentiment as to what is really the most essential point in the discussion—the extremely dangerous condition of the structure in which three thousand men and women are daily engaged in earning a livelihood. But there is unfortunate probability that this extremely important consideration will at least be obscured, if not entirely lost sight of, in a heated difference of opinion as to the desirability of several sites which are being urged upon Congress. In times past, like disagreements have resulted in completely defeating the humane efforts of a few to bring about abandonment of the presentricky structure and the erection of a roomy, solid and well ventilated building. In the course of his remarks yesterday Senator Vest said it was notorious that the situation of the public printing office today was a public scandal. "Our committee," said he, "visited it and went through it. A portion of it is considered unsafe. If any Senator feels any doubt about the question let him read the report of the public printer, who says that in the event of a fire there would be a loss of human life which could not be stated without appalling every one who considered it. Time has become the essence of this question. We might waive the question of economy; we might say a few hundred thousand dollars or even a million dollars should not enter into the determination of this question, but when we consider the condition of the printing office today it is impossible to evade the conclusion that further delay by Congress in regard to this matter becomes absolutely criminal. We have thousands of people huddled together. Until recently there were no fire escapes upon one side of that building, and but two on the other. The Senate House passed a resolution, coming from our committee, providing for fire escapes, which have not been there for years. Even with these additional fire escapes if a fire should occur there now the disaster of Fort's Theater would sink into insignificance and be almost obscured and forgotten. Therefore, I repeat, the immediate action becomes of vital importance."

To this plain statement Senator Sherman added an emphatic announcement of his opinion, to the effect that the House which Mr. Wendell built at the corner of North Capitol and H streets, was entirely unfit for the uses to which it was now put. He said: "It has none of the ordinary incidents or necessities of a modern warehouse or improvements which are essential in a place where men and women labor. It is almost entirely a framework, a frame with a brick wall outside, not sufficient, in my judgment, to maintain even the timbers and heavy weights which Mr. Vest used since the time the government employment has been so greatly increased and the number of books published so vastly multiplied that the building is absolutely unsafe. It is an outrage and a shame upon the working people who are employed there to endanger their lives, as they are daily endangered by the occupancy of that building. It is now overloaded. It has been condemned by everybody who has seen it, and it ought to be abandoned without delay. It seems to me that we are all in a sense responsible when we continue the existence of that building for the printing office business."

The Star is absolutely careless as to sites. It has not the shadow of an interest in the real estate phase of the matter and would not lift a finger to aid in the reaching of the conclusion. But it does insist that long-continued discussion is fraught with a possibility of horror; that every day's delay means so much more of discomfort and actual peril for those who are practically compelled to sit in a shored-up building which is liable to collapse or to burn up at any moment. This condition is recognized by every Senator and Representative who has given even a little attention to the matter, and yet there is promise of dissension and debate well nigh interminable. If there is real desire on the part of the House and Senate committees on public buildings and grounds to make a highly probable catastrophe impossible, the disagreeing members should get together at the earliest moment and reach a conclusion that shall be presented to both Houses as the very best thing to be done under the circumstances. The matter of a few dollars more or less sinks into insignificance when compared with the value of lives momentarily threatened in the great death-trap at North Capitol and H streets.

Washington enjoyed last evening something of the satisfaction that proud beauties are supposed to get from a sly look at their reflections in a glass. At the board of state reception the mirror was held up by distinguished men in Congress and official life, and the children of the State were to see their city as others see it. The picture flashed to them was most gratifying. What perhaps was the most valuable result of the gathering of citizens and legislators was the awakening of citizens themselves to a full sense of their responsibility, as the men who have much if not the most to do with the shaping of the future of the capital city. Washington is now a great city, great in its population, but great in the importance of its position among the cities of the country. Measures affecting its future should therefore be considered with minds broadened by a full realization of the city's present and the promise of its future. The board of trade will more than justify its existence by its efforts in uniting citizens in a common effort to advance the interests of the capital. The spirit of the gathering last night showed that such unity of action is close at hand.

New York is now engaged in the task of comforting herself with the reflection that it is not so bad as it would have been if the supreme bench appointment had gone to, say, Oregon, which is hundreds of miles farther away than Louisiana.

Mr. Croker will doubtless observe with some concern, in Mr. McKane's career, the fate of the man who goes into the ring once too often.

If the British people should suddenly arrive at the conclusion that the house of lords is of no value as a legislative body, but that, on the contrary, it is a hindrance to the nation's material progress, the obnoxious branch of Great Britain's legislature would be lopped off with startling haste. Deliberate of thought, slow to anger, conservative as to methods, the subject of dictatorial have endured much that would not be suffered by any other of the great nations that call themselves free. The latest offense committed by this so-called "upper house" was its rejection of the employers' liability bill, and it is now preparing to deal similarly with the bills that propose to disestablish the church in Wales, to improve the manner of registering voters and to relieve tenants who are in danger of unjust eviction. Should there be adverse action on all these measures—and there is every reason for believing that anything but adverse action is extremely improbable—there is likelihood of organization which will result either in marked changes or the abolition of the lords as legislators. Henry Labouchere, one of the most prominent of radical leaders, says that if the queen's speech opening the next session of parliament does not contain a declaration that a reform of the house of lords is necessary he will move an amendment to the address in reply to the speech declaring that the power of the hereditary and episcopal branch of the legislature to reject or alter bills approved by the house of commons should cease. What ever may be the immediate result of the present and impending agitation, it is certain that the British people must soon weary of the dictation of a body of men who continually stand in the way of every modern and beneficent movement originating with the people themselves.

Mayor Schieren of Brooklyn is a reformer. He was elected to his high office that he might institute and carry out a number of much needed reforms, and he is achieving unpopularity among Brooklyn aldermen, for he has vetoed the resolution which provided for the purchase of eighteen aldermanic gold buttons for more than $50 each. This action was taken, says the mayor, because he can find no provision of law authorizing the expenditure of public money in such a manner. That conclusion may be strictly correct when viewed from the legal standpoint, but many people that the qualities are being cared for. A badge-decorated alderman is a thing of unfading beauty and a potent municipal force, but an alderman without a badge is a lost sheep, an aimless wanderer, a discredited being. With fifty dollars' worth of official insignia upon his breast the alderman was invulnerable to influences such as those which were more or less dependent upon aldermanic favor, credited with possessing the heaven-bestowed gift of infallibility; badgeless, who will be so poor as to do him reverence? Carrying with him the jeweled corporate indorsement of his position, the saloons and the theaters and the trolley lines and all other forms of Brooklyn's amusement were his whenever he wanted them, but when we consider the common councilmen override the mayor's veto there opens up to the aldermanic eye a vista of personal expenditure utterly unexpected, and according to the aldermanic idea, wholly unnecessary.

Always inclined toward sarcasm, and enamored of eccentric honorifics, Mayor Dana of the New York Sun has bent his bow and let fly some of his most beautifully feathered arrows at the form of Mr. J. Adam Bede, nominated by President Cleveland to be United States marshal for the district of Minnesota. Mr. Dana should cease to assail Mr. Bede, for Mr. Bede is one of those bright young newspaper men for whom Mr. Dana so frequently expresses admiration. Mr. Bede has struggled manfully with all manner of adversity, and there are few that know him who will do anything but rejoice at his success. Mr. Bede is one of those rare specimens whom Mr. Dana should grapple with hooks of steel—a democrat in whom there is neither guile, nor variability, nor shadow of turning; an apostle of Jefferson, a follower of Jackson; a true son of the wide-awake west.

One of the most conspicuous evidences of the President's disregard of criticism is his persistence in selecting for office gentlemen whose first names do not please Mr. Dana.

New York might be happy with either Cleveland or Hill—were both dear chummers away.

Having exhausted about all the other moods in the list the German emperor has grown affable.

The Wilson bill is costing enough in time to enable it to be easily classed among the luxuries.

Virginia's oyster navy has in a single engagement eclipsed the entire conflict at Rio.

SHOOTING STARS.
An Off-Hand Opinion.
"I understand," said a Senator, "that Solms is a confirmed bachelor."
"Well," replied his absent-minded colleague, "he is lucky."
"Lucky?"
"Yes. Lucky to be confirmed."

An Interesting Question.
It is an old-time question—
"And it will come again—"
"Why do members of a glee club seem so melancholy men?"

Why He Grieved.
"Terrible thing about the wreck of the Kearsarge," said the caller at the editor's office.
"Yes, it was," was the almost tearful reply. "It was a calamity which few can fully appreciate. And I am one of the few."

Excuse me. I didn't know you would take it so to heart. Does it affect you personally?
"Personally? I should say so. Just think of what a temptation it is to the victims of the poetry habit!"

So She Was.
The prize she took at a baby show, the cutest child of all.
She was, her parents let you know, the belle of all the bawl.

A Heartless Comment.
"I made a fool of myself again yesterday," said Cholly in tones of contrition.
"Really?" said Cholly's sister. "You are becoming very unnecessarily energetic."

Determined.
"I want you to understand," said a belligerent man at a meeting, "that you can't be any czar here."
"Well, then," said the other who he sulky got into his overcoat, "I'll hunt up my stenographer. I'll be a dictator if I die for it."

Sacrificing His Friends.
"Cigars," he said, "upset me quite; they'll never fill the bill; I'll stick to cigarettes and make the other people ill."

Why the Kearsarge Won.
From the Boston Evening Transcript.
Ships and regiments are what their officers make them. It was the good fortune of the Kearsarge to be commanded in the fight which made her name immortal by one of the best officers that ever trod a quarter-deck, the late Admiral (then captain) John Anson Winslow, and all his subordinates were worthy of him. Such officers can convert poor material into a good crew; but the seaman of the Kearsarge were of the best hardy young New Englanders, full of light and knowing what they were fighting for. Admiral Winslow was so modest a man that few of all his acquaintances were aware that he had ever said that the great fight had been all thought out by him in advance; that he fought it beginning to finish, hanging to his antagonist and seeing that every blow counted. Yet such was the fact, and the destruction of the Alabama was not the result of a chance, but of the operation of a carefully formed plan, steadily worked out midst all the noise of battle.

A Startling Comparison.
By the New York World.
By the bursting of a steam-pipe on the great warship Brandenburg, Germany lost more sailors in a moment than the long bombardment of Rio has cost Brazil.

A Question.
From the Omaha Bee.
King Lobengula really dead? What will the British soldier do now?

Where Shall I Go?
OPEN Till 9 P.M.
Today, and Tomorrow Till 1.

Tomorrow's holiday prompts this thought—"Where shall I go?" The reply comes to Women—"Why not visit The Palais Royal and learn of the new style Spring Wraps and Dress Goods?" The writer reads your thought and says: "Don't forget, the Store closes promptly at 1 o'clock." Of course the moral is this: My after breakfast visit must be to The Palais Royal.

BEFORE GIVING DETAILS OF THE SAMPLE CAPES, JACKETS AND SUITS THAT TELL YOU OF LATEST PARIS AND LONDON STYLES, LINKED WITH NOMINAL PRICES, AND BEFORE YOU LEARN OF THE DRESS PATTERNS OF SPRING SUITINGS AT SPECIAL PRICES, LET THE WRITER REMIND YOU OF THE GLOVE HUNTERS' PAY TO ADD TO THE PATRONS OF "PALAIS ROYAL" GLOVES:

A limited number of pairs to be distributed at the wholesale price, the number to be confined to the readers of our announcement.

THEY ARE THE VERY LATEST AND MOST STYLISH 4-BUTTON FRENCH KID GLOVES. NOTE THAT THE FOUR BIG BUTTONS MATCH OR PROPERLY CONTRAST WITH THE GLOVES, AND THAT THE EMBROIDERY MATCHES THE BUTTONS, WHICH IS THE CORRECT PARIS AND LONDON STYLE. THE LATE SPRING IMITATIONS INCLUDE NO LESS THAN NINETEEN DIFFERENT SHADES OF THESE GLOVES, INCLUDED OF COURSE ARE THE POPULAR WHITE AND PEARL, WITH BLACK EMBROIDERY AND BUTTONS.

BUT YOU MAY ASK YOURSELF:—WHY SHOULD THEY WANT TO ADD TO THE NUMBER OF WEARERS OF "PALAIS ROYAL" GLOVES WHEN NO PROFIT ACCRUES? THE REPLY IS THIS:—YOU ARE TO BE SO IMPRESSED WITH THE STYLE, QUALITY, FINISH AND FIT OF THE GLOVES THAT YOU WILL GLADLY PAY $1.50 FOR THE NEXT PAIR YOU REQUIRE—AND THEY WILL BE THESE "PALAIS ROYAL" GLOVES.

BUT PERHAPS "HE WANTS TO BE WITH YOU TOMORROW, AND YOU CAN'T GET THEM" IN A DRY GOODS STORE, YOU CAN IF YOU SHOW HIM THE COUPON BELOW:
